

Welcome to Jack's Place!

Our beloved Chef Jack White grew up in Pulaski, TN and graduated from University of North Alabama. After school, Jack moved on to a series of suit and non-suit jobs — working for the Grand Ole Opry as a tour guide and later at various Hyatt Regency hotels. Meanwhile, he dreamed of acting. He dabbled in theater, cutting his teeth during a stint in dinner theater on the old Belle Carol riverboat. After moving to New York, he appeared in The Guiding Light from 1984-89. "Being an actor was the most fun I'd ever had in my life," White says. He recalls something a favorite acting teacher told him while he was still a young hopeful in New York: "If you enjoy the business, stay in the business" — whether that means acting, cooking, or sweeping the theater floor. "I always wanted ... to be around that environment," White says. "I never thought this would be the way I got there — my ability to cook."

He learned his way around the kitchen as manager of the Ballroom in Chelsea under Felipe Rojas-Lombardi, founding chef of Dean & DeLuca. White later moved to Los Angeles to pursue acting. On the side, he worked for a caterer and gradually found his way into more and more food-styling gigs. More than twenty years later, he's styled food for more than 100 movies and TV shows, including The Girl with the Dragon Tattoo, Saving Grace, The Social Network, Spanglish and is best known for his work in The Hunger Games series.

"If you see any movie with a beautiful meal in it, that's Jack," says Despina Gianopulos Landers, a longtime friend and client of White's and former VP of promotion at E! Networks. "If it has a gorgeous birthday cake in it, that's Jack. ... He's amazing, creative, and talented." She says White is also well known in Los Angeles for catering large and lavish entertainments events for TV and music companies.

These days, Chef White has gone back to his roots. We are pleased to invite you into our home and share in our love of fresh, beautiful, food.

Bon Appetit!
